

Greetings from the Riverbend Dutchmen

Kristofer Keltgen - Owner

Planning an event, festival, running a restaurant or club, is really hard. There is a lot at stake for those involved. You are trying to get loyal patrons that will return because you are offering them something special. If you want great food, you hire a great chef. If you want great décor, you hire a great interior decorator. You expect these professionals to do their best at what you are hiring them to do. It needs to be the same with the band. You hire a great band and should expect great music. The music is another product for the venue to offer, no different from food or beverages.

So often event planners want to offer polka music for their event. Perhaps they are planning a fair, community celebration, or Oktoberfest. When searching for entertainment, someone offers an obscure relative that owns an accordion that once played in a polka band. On the day of the event, the cost was cheap, but so was the music!

When your event or venue opens its doors, it has to market itself. One can't expect people to just walk in the door. By offering quality, professional entertainment, you are giving people a reason to attend your event. Consistent quality entertainment over time is the key to success for many large events and venues. People have come to expect great quality entertainment and it keeps them coming back to your event year after year.
